Vance Beginning Tough Mission To Middle East

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4 (UPI) — Secretary of State Cyrus Vance left for the Middle East tonight to begin a five-day effort to resume direct Egyptian-Israeli peace talks.

He will visit Jerusalem and Alexandria, Egypt.
Diplomatic officials doubt that positions of the two sides can be recon-cited under the present circumstances. Pessimistic about the possibility of adramatic break in the stalemate, they say that the trip has taken on the property of a damage-assessment mission at a time when the issue of the trip has taken on the trip has Bank of the Jordan River impedes

The diplomatic officials said that the future of the Egyptian-Israeli negotintions hangs on a single question: whether and when Israel will commit itself to a substantial witbdrawal from the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

Israeli officials said during talks

last month in Britain that Israel would be prepared to discuss the question after a period of transition under Israeli supervision. Egypt is demanding an immediate commit-ment, but would allow the actual

The letter, which originated in the office of Sen, Jack Dan-forth, R-Mo., and which received low-level backing from pro-Israeli lobbving groups called on Mr. Vance to press Egypt and Saudi Arabia for a tesumption of Israeli-Egyptian peace negotiations.

Pressures Reported -

Mr. Vance and his special Middle East envoy, Alfred Atherton, have been quoted this week as having said that Saudi Arabia is urging Mr. Sadai to admit that the peace initiative he launched in November has failed, and to rejoin Arab ranks in refusing direct contacts with These reports, confirmed privately by administration officials, have triggered new criti-cism of the Saudi role from some traditional supporters of Israel.

A-Blast Veteran Wins Leukemia Decision

By Walter Pincus

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4 (WP) — In a decision that could affect thousands of former soldiers, the Board of Veterans Appeals has decided to award service-connected disability benefits to a U.S. Army veteran suffering from leukemia who claimed that his illness resulted from exposure to radiation during a 1957 nuclear weapons test.

About 40,000 of the soldiers, including Mr. Coe, participated in the 1950s in a series of nuclear tests in which troops conducted maneuvers through the test site within bours of the explosion. The other soldiers were witnesses to nuclear explosions.

About 2,400 former soldiers who participated in the tests recently reported to the Defense Department that they have subsequently become ill either with leukemia or some other form of cancer.

First Case

Mr. Coe's was the first case involving a former serviceman in which the Veterans Appeals board found that "it is reasonably probable" that the radiation exposure during the 1957 weapons test, called Smoky, was a competent causative factor of disease, even though the leukemia appeared many years after exposure and after his retirement

In addition, his wife and children would be eligible for educational benefits under the GI Bill.

Currently, Mr. Coe gets a $165 a month pension check.

They were David Holmes, 47, of London, a former deputy treasurer of the Liberal Party, who was the best man at Mr. Thorpe's first wedding and is the godfather of his son, Rupert: two Welsh businessmen -John Le Mesurier, 44, a former car-pet salesman, and George Deakin, 35, a nightclub owner and slot-ma-

A spokesman for Japan Air Lines, however, crinicized what be called the exorbitant landing fees charged by the airport. He said the landing fee for a jumbo jet is $4,492 compared to $2,897 at Haneda.

Morale Buoyed

The sanctions remain in force, but white morale has been bnoyed by the vote in the U.S. House of Representatives Wednesday that tied their removal to free elections by the end of this year, and by an, earlier resolutioo adopted by the Senate giving President Carter the power to lift sanctions if he was convinced that a Rhodesian gov-ernment had committed itself to negotiate in good faith with the Even greater attention has been directed to events in London. With the prospect of a general electioo in Britain this fall, most whites hope for a victory by the Conservative Party, which has hinted that it might lift sanctions and recognize a black government chosen in the elections that the transitional government is planning in December.

The transitional government. meanwhile, is losing popularity bere. Its failures over the last five mooths have raised pressing doubts about the viability of any black government that emerges from it.

Among blacks, its biggest failure racial discrimination. After three months' delay, a ministerial com-mittee was established to review the problem, but its orders spoke of the possibility of retaining discriminatory measures that were found to be "in the national interest."

Although embarrassed, Mr. Smith's black partners have defended such compromises as under-standable in view of the oced for white support in a scheduled Sep-tember referendum on the constitutional pact. But their charitable attitude is not widely shared among the country's 6.7 million blacks.

One of the many signs of disaffection came yesterday, when four leading members of Bishop Abel Muzorewa's group issued a state-ment attacking him for betraying its fundamental principles. When Foreign Minister Pieter Van der Byl lauded Mr. Muzorewa in Parliament later in the day for his efforts abroad to get sanctions

Mr. Smith's government. In some border areas, almost all white farms have been deserted. Hardly a road in the country is considered safe without a weapon, day or night.

The effect oo morale was suggested in a special briefing for reporters this week by the military commander, Lt. Gen. Peter Walls, to counter suggestions that the country was "running down." But his choice of words only underlined the gravity of the situation. "There is oo danger at this time of a bloodbath," he said at one point. At another, he appealed to whites in remote areas to "hang on" for the elections.

Cruise Ships: The Dirty Fleet

NEW YORK, Aug. 4 (AP) — An armada of cruise ships sets sail each month with high-paying passengers blithely unaware that the liners flunk sanitation tests because of cockroaches, greasy dishes and toilets that don't work.

In its most recent summary of sanitation conditions aboard 74 passenger ships, the U.S. Public Health Service noted that 40 of the vessels had failed their last inspection.

Cunard's Queen Elizabeth II, with a minimum fare of $695 for an 8-day Caribbean cruise, failed seven of 10 inspections since last October, according to John Yashuk, chief of sanitation in the Health Service's quarantine division. Among its problems were inadequate refrigeration for food and food residue on shelves.

The controversy-ridden cruise liner S.S. America flunked an inspection last month by scoring 6 out of a possible 100. Eighty-five is passing. Mr. Yashuk says two other ships have scored as badly.

Standards Revised

In 1975, when we revised the standards, not a single ship could meet them. Mr. Yashuk said in a recent interview from his Miami office. "Today we have eight or 10 that seldom fail."

What happens when a ship fails? As a rule, Mr. Yashuk concedes, the same thing that bappened after the troubled maiden voyage of the Panamanian-registered America under Venture Cruise Lines Inc.: Nothing. Lines Inc.: Nothing.

Within 12 hours, the ship steamed hack to New York to let 250 angry passengers off. They said they had no place to sleep and complained of roaches and toilets that didn't flush.

At the cruise's end July 3, Public Health inspectors were waiting. After a partial inspection, they gave the America a score of 32.

Most cruise lines are cooperative, Mr. Yashuk said, and, so far, all have agreed not to sail when he makes that recommendation.

While Mr. Yashuk hasn't much muscle to enforce the standards, he noted that anyone can get free copies of his reports. Further, about 800 persons, mostly travel agents, now receive monthly summaries that list the ships and whether they failed their last inspection.

And, muscle or not, Mr. Yashuk said it appears that the tough 1975 standards that so many ships fail to meet are making a difference:

There were 11 outbreaks of shipboard gastrointestinal illness in 1975 and in 1976; during 1977, there were four outbreaks and so far this year there have been just two outbreaks, he said.

officials of customer concerns as well as officials or employees of government agencies, an FTC source explained.

The commission is seen as using its authority to act against unfair competition by payoff. In complaints approved by the commission earlier this year as part of a settlement with the companies, the FTC bad accused Lockheed. Boeing and McDonnell Douglas of making "improver payments to making "improper payments to procure sales of aircraft abroad." which "injured American competitors by denying them the opportunity to compete for such sales."

Unfair Competition

The wording of the commission's complaints and now of the consent orders, in line with the FTC's usual practice in settlements, was negoti-ated by lawyers for the agency and the three companies. Their formal announcement by the agency is not expected for several days.

As explained in a summary of the action prepared by the FTC staff, the orders require the companies to "stop making payments to officers, employees, agents or rep-resentatives of commercial customers or foreign governments where the purpose of the payments" is "to deny other American aircraft manufacturers the opportunity of com-peting for aircraft sales abroad."

The orders state that the prohibition applies not only to officers and employees of the companies hut also to their "representatives." As interpreted by the FTC, the wording makes the three companies liable for the actions of their overseas sales agents, whose commissions sometimes millions of dollars have been suspected to include large payoffs to government offi-20-Foot Wall of Water Sweeps Texas Valley, Kills 9

ERA Extension Clears Hurdle In House Panel

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4 (WP) — An extension of time for ratifica-tion of the Equal Rights Amendment cleared another hurdle to the House yesterday, as the House Rules Committee voted to bring the measure to the floor.

The extension is expected to come to the floor before the Aug. 19 recess. It is given e good chance to pass in the House, but its fate is uncertain in the Senate, where at least one senator has threatened a The Rules Committee rejected by an 8-8 vote a move by Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., to have the House vote on whether a two-thirds vote for passage is geeded for the extension. A two-thirds vote is needed to adopt a constitutional amendment such as the Equal Rights Amendment, but supporters of the extension argue that a two-thirds vote is our oeeded for the exlension because it is not part of the amendment but simply a procedural question.

The two-thirds vote question is. likely to come up on the House floor, but it probably will be resolved by a parliamentary ruling rather than a House vote because of the Rules Committee action. The extension would postpone stales to ratify the ERA until June 30, 1982. The ERA is now three states short of the 38 necessary for ratification.

Court Sets Date For Hearings on Gandhi Trial

NEW DELHI, Aug. 4 (AP) —
The Supreme Court of India today set Sept. 11 to start hearings on the legality of setting up special courts to try former Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and others accused of abusing power during her 1975-1977 emergency rule.

The court also opened the possi-bility for Mrs. Gandhi or ber lawvers to appear before it on the question of special courts. It ordered official notices published in newspapers throughout India "inviting all persons likely to be affected" to submit written statements or ask to appear.

The procedure adopted by the Supreme Court indicated contin-ued delay before a final verdict on the question that has dominated Indian public life since the Gandhi regime fell from power in last year's national elections.

This is whether Mrs. Gandhi is to be punished for assuming emergency powers in 1975, and for the alleged abuses that followed, when thousands of her critics were jailed

Gierek Meets Pope

In return for its concessions, the state had hoped for church backing, on a range of government actions on economic and social problems. These expectations were raised last fall by the first meeting in more than 10 years between a Polish Communist leader. Edward Gierek. and the primate. Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski. A meeting between Mr. Gierek and Pope Paul at the Vatican, the first in 1,000 years between a pope and a secular leader of Poland, appeared to keep the momentum going.

Permits for new churches were granted, letters on a range of mutual concerns were exchanged between the cardinal and Mr. Gierek, Vatican diplnmats began visiting Poland and in the government, the church became a topic for polite discussion rather than vilification.

In January, while President Carter was visiting bere, his wife Rosalynn and Zbigniew Brzezinski, his adviser on national security, had an unusual meeting with Car-dinal Wyszynski. Mr. Brzezinski praised the cardinal and Mr. Gierek as extraordinary leaders.

Cool Reception

The situation then began to sour. Censors banned the Catholic press from publishing photographs of Mrs. Carter's meeting with the cardinal. Publication of the cardinal Spinhary segmen was delayed for Epiphany sermon was delayed for more than a month in the official Catholic newspaper, and scores of other church publications and periodicals encountered delays, questions and deletions by the partycontrolled information hureau

While no one has formally declared a hreakdown, and pro forma contacts continue between the episcopate and Kazimierz Kakol, the religious affairs minister, each side has been blaming the other in pri-vate. Recriminations have begun appearing in church statements and in government-controlled media.

Because the role of the Anglican Church is regarded as important to this process, other churches watch its changes carefully.

Observers Present

There are three Roman Catholic observers and three from the Orthodox churches here. They have stated their opposition to women's ordination but have assured the Anglicans that unity talks should proceed. Observers from Protestant churches and from major ecumeni-Ecumenical discussion is low

Church are close, although Orthodox leaders are strongly against the ordination of women. Anglicans feel most drawn to the mystical, spiritual side of Orthodoxy and in many ways already mirror the Or-thodox style of church government. Both churches recognize a spirit-

CARACAS, Aug. 4 (NYT) — As the oil money has flowed, this nation of 12.5 million, with the highest per capita income in Latin America, has shown an enormous capacity for spending it. After the oil countries raised prices fourfold in 1973, an avalanche of petrodollars led in a spending spree by both government and consumers.

Billions of dollars of public money were designated for a crash program to buy a diversified industrial economy by the mid-1980s. Consumers have spent lavishly on cars, food, drink and travel. There is a shortage of skilled labor and unem-ployment is minimal.

The two leading ones are Luis Pinerua Orday, a congressman for the Democratic Action Party of President Carlos Andres Perez, whn cannot succeed himself, and Sen. Luis Herrera Campins of the Social Christian Party.

Largely because of imports — estimated to have increased 235 per-cent since 1973 — the country is this year expected to have its first trade deficit in decades, along with a current-account deficit of more than $1 hillion. Planners feel confident, though, because of foreign-ex-change reserves estimated at $8 bil-

Bubes and Facilisms

Much of the borrowing was justified on sound business grounds to finance heavy capital goods for the ambitious 1976-80 plan for social and economic development, which contemplates immense outlays for 13 projects in such areas as steel, aluminum, transportation, electric power and cargo ships, as well as social welfare.

Overruns have shown the initial estimate of $28 billion of government funds in a total of $52 hillion to be far too law. Criticism of the plan as grandiose and overambiifous has increased, although there is little doubt that it will eventually produce real benefits.

Influence-peddling, known as pulanca, used to be needed to push ministries. Now corruption is the most discussed political issue. Pulanca seems to be declining while hribes large and small have become commonplace,

435 Secretaries of State

The mauling the House has been administering to selected bits of the administration's foreign policy is a disturbing thing to behold. To be sure, the House did at least one major responsible deed by ending the Turkisb arms embargo — a step that puts the Turks under an unavoidable obligation to make possible a fair settlement on Cyprus. But that was done in thoughtful response to a well-debated, carefully studied administration proposal which, in turn, was based on a feeling for the situation in all its complexity that only a president and his diplomatic advisers can claim to bave. In foreign aid and on several substantive issues pertaining to particular countries, the House has acted with deplorable indifference to the real merits of the matters at hand.

We refer specifically to the readiness of the House to legislate on the floor without sifting proposals through the committee system, which at least gives the legislators the opportunity for study and debate and lets the executive branch make its case and muster its troops. The Turkish question went through the proper process, as did the Mideast arms package and, of course, the Panama Canal treaties; all ended in administration victories.

This week, however, policy amendments, hastily contrived and poorly constructed on the floor, carried on with at least three issues. One, the amendment halting arms deliveries to Chile until it extradites three officials indicted in the murder of Orlando Letelier, was so patently wrongheaded that it was yanked back within hours. An alert Justice Department pointed out bow absurd and provocative it was to punish Chile for not doing in one day what the law allows it two months to

Two other measures, however, do not lend themselves to remedy so easily. On Rhodesia, the House voted to lift trade restrictions at the end of the year if an elected government is installed. That is a blunt formulation that tramples on the subtleties that made the Senate's Rhodesia amendment difficult but bearable and even, under certain circumstances, usable by administration diplomats.

On Syria, congressmen suddenly cut off a year's worth of economic aid, ostensibly in reprisal for the assaults Syria has made on Christians in Lebanon in the course of trying to pacify that torn country. One does not bave to approve of Syria's Lebanon policy to realize that an aid cutoff of what is, after all, a secondary issue, may jeopardize the basis on which the United States is trying to win Syrian cooperation in the search for a Mideast settlement. Even more than on Rhodesia, the House moved on Syria without displaying the slightest understanding of the overall play of that country's relations with the United States.

No better demonstration could be made that there cannot be 435 secretaries of state on Capitol Hill — or 535. The Senate has at least recognized — though perhaps fingers should be kept crossed — that it is both wise and fair to consult the administration even while challenging it. The House, however, is capable of going off half-cocked. Many members tend to slough off both committee discipline and party discipline, and see no difference between doing so in domestic matters and in foreign affairs. (Republicans saved the administration on Turkey.) Congressional leadership no longer exists in a form that makes close executive liaison very productive on some of these issues. The Vietnam-born doctrine of prevailing congressional co-responsibility in foreign policy can become, at emotional moments, a license for irresponsibility.

A Look at Informers

Informers are universally despised — and universally employed. Even when they help solves serious crimes, we grant them no bonor; they too much resemble the criminals they trap. Yet we demand and require their services to defend us against crime and subversion. The FBI alone uses 2,800 informers, paying many of them piecework for the information delivered. William Webster, the very civilized FBI director, told Congress recently that despite "a tradition against snitching . . the informant is the, with a capital T. The most effective tool in law inforcement today - state, local or federal."

We suffer informants as long as we don't have to look at them. But the case of Gary Thomas Rowe Jr., who was employed by the FBI to infiltrate the Ku Klux Klan, has forced the nation to take a hard new look at the breed. Mr. Rowe was the eyewitness wbo made the case that convicted klansmen of killing a civil rights worker, Viola Liuzzo, on abama highway in 1965. Now it turns out that Mr. Rowe may have crossed the line between witness and perpetrator, between observing and engaging in acts of violence while "posing" as a Klan member. By his own account, be killed a black man in 1963 while on the FBI payroll. He is being asked about his role in the assaults on Freedom Riders, and whether be was really as passive as he claims in the Liuzzo affair. The facts are not clear in any of this; the questions turn not only on Mr. Rowe's conduct but on that of FBI informants over the years.

By definition informants must pass them-

They must go to great lengths to gain credibility inside a criminal conspiracy and must sometimes pass tests of violence that secret organizations devise to purge the uncommitted. How far should "our" agents be allowed to go? Who is to make the spot judgments and by what guidelines? Publish those guidelines, and the "enemy" will be forewarned; keep them secret, and the agents may be unaccountable. It seems tolerable that informants should be allowed to engage in minor crimes to prevent or punish larger ones — but bow minor? And when an informant finds nothing on which to inform, is it his job to try to provoke misconduct?

Disruption of the dissident but law-abiding Socialist Workers Party continued for four decades before it was ordered stopped two years ago; the full extent of the informers' provocation is still not known because the Justice Department believes it must protect them even at the risk of contempt of

In writing a charter to bring all FBI operations more securely within the rule of law, Congress has only begun to face the hard questions. One proposal for controlling informers is to require court warrants for employing them. The imperfect analogy is made to a search or wiretap: A planted spy can be just as intrusive as a tap on the phone or hidden microphone — more so since he moves, talks and acts among his prey. The Justice Department is appalled by the idea of warrants, but it bears the burden of showing that other controls could be as effective.

Lebanese Conflict

Only a few days ago, Syria still demanded that the Lebanese regular army be disbanded. Now it is reported that regular Lebanese troops are moving into south Lebanon with Syria's consent. The apparent contradiction can be explained by the fact that since the end of the Lebanese civil war, there bave been two regular armies in Lebanon: A small section consisting mainly of Moslems, that fled during the civil war to Syrian-occupied east Lebanon, and a new army that is being built up, in which mostly Christians serve. The units that are now moving toward south Lebanon have been so long indoctrinated by the Syrians that one can almost consider them as already part of the Syrian armed

Therefore, it is understandable that Israel and the Christians in south Lebanon expect little good from the new arrivals. The worst part of this unexpected turn is that it makes the whole conflict in Lebanon more confusing. With great intelligence and much cunning, Syrian President Assad advances toward his goal: to subdue Lebanon, possibly without attracting the attention of the

But Assad apparently underestimates the difficulties of the venture. It has not remained unnoticed that his troops repeatdly fired on heavily populated residential areas of the Christian section in Beirut, in violation of international law. And Assad has entered a battle that be cannot easily and victoriously end, despite the military weakness of the

U.S. Foreign Policy: A Different World

By Stanley Hoffmann

MAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The contradictions and inconsis-tencies of the Carter administration's foreign policy are real. But could another president do much better? We judge the success of our diplomacy by reference to a golden age that we idealize: the postwar years when the United States domi-nated the world stage. But two major revolutions have occurred. The first revolution affects the nitely more complex world. Thirty years ago, our allies were our dependents, and our main adversary had been ravaged by war. Our military and economic power was overwhelming. Today, Western Eu-rope and Japan have become major rope and Japan have become major centers of economic power. By comparison, America's productivi-ty and technological lead have fall-en. The Soviet Union has devoted much of its growth to catching up with our military advance. While the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries remain developing countries in need of Western assistance, our depend-ence and that of our allies on outside oil have made them powers to be reckoned with. Even states devoid of OPEC's resources have become independent centers of decision concerned above all with their own survival, influence and quar-

Monetary Collapse

Economic issues in which the East-West conflict plays little role have become major items on states-men's agendas because of the collapse of the international monetary order, the revolt of the developing countries against the rich and the combined recession and inflation in the capitalist industrial world.

The United States finds itself in a most uncomfortable position. Its two biggest assets — military might and economic power — do not guarantee quick and successful out-comes. Given the tisks of escalation, we must avoid military clashes with our chief adversary. Using force against his proxies can be dis-astrous, as we discovered in Viet-nam, if the regime we try to bolster proves incapable of standing on its own feet, and if our adversary skillfully identifies with a popular

We are too eager to export our own goods — grain to the Russians, planes to the Europeans, arms everywhere - and too dependent on outside energy and raw materials to use our wealth and technology as a stick, and we are in tough competition with our allies when we want

In a world of 150 states, most of which have only recently been emancipated from colonialism into poverty, many of which are tyran-nies, and almost all of which resist attempts at being enlisted into the cold war — although they do not mind enlisting one or the other superpower for their own causes --the United States cannot behave as if the dominant issue in world affairs were the struggle of freedom against tyranny. This would be ei-ther a recipe for isolation or a bypocritical and vain formula for trying to turn the clock back. Conainment, whether through the building of barrages against Com-munism, or through the weaving of a network of restraining agreements with the Russians, is relevant only to some problems, and often provides no clear guidance even hen it is.

And yet the persistent contest between the superpowers makes it impossible to look at the world as a U.S. position in the world. Our relfragmented agglomeration of disative power has declined in an inficrete conflicts, each one to be resolved exclusively on its merits. Both this contest, and the new complexities of international politics, turn the other grand American dream — that of being the master builder of a pluralistic world order into a nightmare.

The second revolution affects the making of U.S. foreign policy. Until the early 1970s, the president had enormous leeway. The public supported him, as long as he stood up to the Russians while preserving peace, and Congress had gradually abdicated its responsibilities to the public and secret agencies of the executive. Since Vietnam and Watergate, individual members of Congress insist on having their own policy on every issue. Both the Congress and public opinion, worried by the apparent ineffectiveness of U.S. power, seek domestic scapegoats, show nostalgia for the sim-pler days of containment and sustain a wrongheaded conviction that flexing one's muscles will bring relief and rewards. The president is torn between domestic pressures and external imperatives. The former demand toughness, both against the Russians and against successful economic competitors. The latter require careful choices, a will to fore go short-term spectaculars in favor long-term interests, and a complex balancing act aimed at reconciling these interests that often go in opposite directions.

This world raises a formidable challenge to the diplomacy of a country with no other experiences. than isolation or supremacy. U.S. ated their own obstacles, waived Alan only in wartime or when foreign [and ] mous. It is not surprising that the not administration has not resolved the redicament. It is too bad that it w as sometimes made it worse.

Mideast Wars

In reply to Dr. A.R. George's let-ter (IHT, July 27) he states, speak-ing of the four Arab-Israeli wars: ing of the four Arab-Israeu wars.
"The Israelis can at least draw comfort from the knowledge that they initiated three of these. I would suggest that Dr. George read his history again. I ask Dr. George the following questions:

1) Who rejected the UN mandate of Nov. 27, 1947? This mandate authorized the establishment in Palestine of one Jewish state and one Arab state. Israel accepted and the Arabs refused.

2) Who started the terrorist war against the Jews in Palestine on

Nov. 28, 1957?
3) Who sent five armies into newly proclaimed Israel on May 15, 1948, hours after Israel's declaration of independence?

4) Who ousted the UN troops from Sinai, blocked Israeli shipping from Elath, massed troups on Israel's borders and declared themselves ready to throw all Israelis into the sea in a holy war in 1967? 5) Who attacked in 1973?

Dr. George, if you answer these questions correctly and not with the PLO's fiction, your answer will be that the three wars were started by the Arabs. I would, however, agree with Dr. George when he says that the Palestinian problem must be solved to establish peace, but the Palestinian problem is an Arab problem, and the Arabs must solve it. No one spoke of a Palestinian state from 1948 to 1967 when the West bank and Gaza were in Arab hands. Also, I would point out to Dr.

George that the Israeli declaration of independence asks the Arabs to join Israel in peace. The Arabs rejected this for 30 years. I think Mr. Sadai is a man of peace and I sincerely bope that Mr. Begin will start to negotiate with him based on the return of the West Bank and Gaza. But the world must understand that after 30 years of war trust comes slowly.
FRANK M. SCHURGAST.

Lebanon Conflict

One can very readily sympathize with Raymond Edde's bitterness with the Syrians (1HT, July 27) for it is clear now, more than ever before, that Syria's aim in Lebanon is to control that country and turn il into a part of Greater Syria, as it for U.S. commitment to sell Jakarta would like to do with Jordan, given a squadron of A-4 ground-attack long-stalled wellhead tax, and re- the opportunity. However, it is bombers useful only for purposes ironic that he should accuse Israel of counter-guerrilla warfare. The when all the while, until the Palestinians moved into Lebanon in great force after 1970, Israel has been scrupulously careful to keep its border with Lebanon peaceful.

I should like to remind Mr. Edde that during the Israeli war of independence in 1948, the Israeli army moved into south Lebanon and occupied for a while the eastern part of it up to the Litani River in what was called "Operation Yiftach." The operation being completed, the Israeli Army withdrew. Surely, if Israel wanted to keep that part of Lebanon, it would have done so then, when it might have been a lot easier to do so. Rights in Indonesia

Although Tom Wicker (IHT, July 26) is probably right in stating that the "improved climate of human rights" under the Carter administration helped lead to the December, 1977, release of 10,000 of Indonesia's long-term political prisonners (and, most recently, the re-lease of 4,000 political detainers on the day of the Wicker column appeared), one must look at these releases and other aspects of the Carter Indonesia policy with cau-

Many of the prisoners released last December after more than 12 years imprisonment without trial were broken in health and advanced in years. These ex-prisoners now face severe discrimination in their quest for employment, barred as they are from working for the government or undefined vital enterprises". Furthermore, although the Indonesian government claims that they will have released all political prisoners by the end of 1979, this only covers the 20,000 officially acknowledged prisoners. Most knowledgeable observers, including Amnesty International, believe the actual figure to be at least twice the amount. Yes, the Carter administration accepts the official Indonesian government figures.

On other aspects of Carter's Indonesia policy, it should be noted that Vice President Mondale's recent visit to Jakarta (as reported in The New York Times on May 14) saw an agreement being made which would speed up the release to this sale and through other policy astions, is choosing to ignore continuing fighting and chilling reports of Indonesian atrocities in East Timor, and indeed is facilitating further human rights violations in that unfortunate country. # Viani's View of Reality: Jagged, Bold and Stark

By Edith Schloss

Viareggio, Italy (IHT) — Lorenzo Viani, horn in Viareggio on the Versilian littoral, between the rugged marhle-yielding Apuanian aips and the Mediterranean, was an intense and receptive personality. Bound to his land its people and customs, observing them with sympathy and also sharp insight, he wrote essays and poetry in pure Tuscan sentences and painted and drew all his life. His feelings, all that he lived with, the drama of ordinary events surrounding him, he passionately put down in paint or ink to share with others.

On cardboard, on found wooden panel — rarely at first on canvas for lack of funds — he scratched with charcoal or pastel or pushed his brush, so that with sluhborn, jagged, hut imaginative, marks and stark contrasts of color he could express all that he intuitively understood about his friends and neighbors: His portraits of sailers, quarry workers and others who daily faced the elements, and those who succumbed to them, the maimed and crazy, were his most penetrating works. An air of foreboding and fate pervaded all of them.

Tuscan oxen toiling in a flat field or in a flinty quarry are rendered with poetic simplicity. The harbor scenes — always against the mood of the sea, milky at sunrise, blue at noon, red in the evening — are in clear and determined chunks and shapes. Even in the marvelously straightforward, sometimes feverish portraits a swipe of color denoting the sea never lets us forget the element that is background for everything that happens on this coast. And there are dun-colored interiors, of asylums, police stations and poor houses as well.

Marble Mountains

When not engaged in small literary jobs Viani walked over the countryside, from Viareggio 10 La Spezia, in all kinds of weather. He explored the marble mountains and the haunts of their poets, Carducei in Stazzema, Pascoli in Barga. In Viareggio, not far from the little monument for Shelley, who drowned nearby, he spent his evenings with the local intellectuals at the Bar Balena. Still in his prime, but freil he died in the '31s.

Besides his portraits and other average-sized paintings a number of his pictures were of mural size. "The Plague at Lucca" and "The Blessing of the Lost at Sea" are somber compositions that verge on the visionary. One huge canvas, boars with billowing sails sailing a far blue fairyland, set down with a few fervid strokes, is almost mystical. None of these large works in the exhibition, which were meant for public places, were commissioned. All were painted on unsized canvas, the raw fahric acting to give incisive brilliance, something which later became common in abstract expressionism but which no one had heard of in the '20s.

Towards the end of his life Viant's oils became more agitated and intricate, full of little stabs of paint that perhaps indicated the rise of a new style. Views of storm at sea with apparitions of saints — modern versions of the old popular votive paintings — were tragical-

More urgent than sentimental, his need to expose his insights for all to see was existential. This collection of his work is exhibited in a recently restored Tuscan farmhouse given to the Viani Foundation by Mrs. Enrico Fermi, the wife of the physicist, and is located near Puccini's Torre del Lago. The group of drawings, woodhlock prints, oils and large paintings there are also Viani's printed books on view — is uneven, though there are 154 pieces.

Now this is a question which must have occurred to most people who have sat in the theater watching the work of young writers. Even granting, for a moment, the truth of lones's explanation, the question remains: Why? Why write a stage play that is best fitted for performance in another medium?

There are sbort scenes in plenty and rapidly changing locales, though not much economy of expo-sition and little narrative momen-tum. failure to condemn Robeson's admiration for Stalin.

Neither attitude seems justifiable. The play provides enough evidence of Robeson's beliefs for the audience to make their own judgments. Whatever his failings, he was a great artist and a great man, willing to fight openly for his be-liefs and suffering much for them. If his political judgment was based solely on the way black people were treated, then that is understandable within the context of his life - a formidable athlete, lawyer and performer he was always faced with white hostility and his career was cut short by prejudice.

Dean's play is an anecdotal biog-raphy, marked by some wit and much sentimentality. But James Earl Jones, given exellent support by his saturnine and swinging accompanist Burt Wallace over-comes any deficiences. His mesmeric performance honors both Robeson and the theater. His acting is of the highest quality, full of a massive dignity and humanity. He reasserts the unique quality of theatre, which has nothing to do with the plays of their construction, hus with actors and their charismatic skills.

At the RSC's Warehouse, Pete Atkin's "A and R" is a greatly revealing play of the world of rock music in its shabbier and more endearing manifestation. LONDON, Aug. 4 (1HT) — last year's £6.569,000 — and there inflation does not have to be taken intensified dramatically this year. Never before has the need to tap foreign artistic resources and to attract foreign huyers come out so strongly in the end-of-season reports issued by the two main auction houses in London. Sotheby's report under-lines the increasing interest in auctions, which was reflected both in a 10½ percent rise in public attendance and in private U.S. hidding

American Painting

This may have been prompted partly by widening interest in American painting, which induces American painting, which induces collectors who otherwise would have hardly spared the time to attend in person. The trend was highlighted last June when "The Jolly Floatboatmen" by George Caleb Bingham established the world record for an American painting when it was sold for $980,000 in the group's Los Angeles salesroom. Earlier in April another record, this time for an American painting when it was sold for $980,000 in the group's Los Angeles salesroom. Earlier in April another record, this time for an American other record, this time for an American portrait, was established when a portrait of Arcbhishop William Henry Elder by Thomas Eakin sold for $265,000 in New York.

But other categories have started fetching very high prices at U.S. auctions, including old master paintings that traditionally sold better in London than in New York, On Jan. 13, for example, the world record for an old master still life was set in New York when a Jan Brueghel the Elder rose to

More significant of the new success of U.S. auctions is Sotbeby's latest initiative in shunting off larger quantities of 19th-century decorative art to PB 84, its New York no-frills auction. On April 19, the Victorian International Sale hrought the highest total ever at PB 84 — $536,300 — and attracted buyers from all parts of America.

Jewelry Sales

Christie's jewelery sales in New York totaled $6 million, the highest total for a single department. More important, they scored successes in the decorative arts field. American art naturally played a considerable role. A Tiffany stained-glass window went for a world record $60,000. But European art of the 18th century also did quite well. A pair of vases from Meissen, made for Augustus of Saxony, also established a world record price of $88,000 in their category. And at the Pennsylvania home of the late Charlotte Dorrance Wright, where Christie's held one of its "house sales," a record for a house sale in the United States was set with $1.9 million.

Even little Phillips, the third London auction house that bas been trying very bard to catch top with the big two, has been caught up by the American obsession. It opened new premises in New York this season and have scheduled 33 ater stage.

Saudis Get 21st Seat on IMF Board

Temporary Role Puts Arabs With 'Big Six'

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4 (WP) — The United States and other major powers of the International Monetary Fund have reached an informal agreement under which Saudi Arabia will have its own seat and its own executive director on an enlarged IMF executive board.

It will be a temporary 21st seat, for at least the next two years, making the Arab nation a member of a new "Bix Six" of the IMF, including the United States, Britain, West the consortium that builds the Germany, France, and Japan. The changeover will be made official when executive directors are selected in a biennial vote during the annual meeting of the IMF bere late in September.

It had been decided about a year ago that the Saudis, as the second largest lender of funds to the IMF. were entitled to their own seat on the board. But until now, the United States had opposed enlarging the 20-man board, setting up a po-tentially difficult political situation in deciding which one of the other 15 executive directors - representing smaller countries — would be forced off the board.

A Saudi seat is one more certification of growing economic power in the Arab world, and a status symbol known to be welcomed by King Khaled. If the Saudis continue as the second largest creditor, they will continue to hold the 21st seat. An assessment of creditor rankings is made every two years.

20 Executive Directors Under the present system, there are 20 executive directors, of wbom five are appointed by countries that make the largest quota deposits into the IMF. They are the five nations, other than Saudi Arabia, in the "Bix Six." The remaining 15 directors represent "clusters" of the others of the 134 member countries. In some, the largest country of the group nominates the director. In others, the honor rotates.

The Saudi acquisition of a seat derives from an IMF rule providing that if the two largest creditors of the IMF are not among the five major quota countries, they are entitled to their own executive directors. Saudi Arabia has passed West Germany as the second largest creditor — the United States is

TI Bubble — A Computer First

By Peter J. Schuyten

NEW YORK, Aug. 4 (NYT) - Following months of speculation by the electronics and computer industries, Texas Instruments has decided to proceed with its magnetic bubble computer memory, a technology that is expected to alter a significant portion of the computer-memory business.

Bubble memories, which are capable of storing more information on a single chip than the semi-conductor memories they will compete with, are more compact than other forms of memory storage - disk drives, tape and magnetic core - and they do not lose stored data when power is off.

Magnetic bubble memories capable of storing large amounts of data inexpensively are expected to find wide use in such diverse storage applications as remote computer terminals, computerized voice recognition and telephone memory systems and minicomputers. Because they are solid-state devices, they can be used in environments hostile to other computer equipment, such as the high hu-midity or dirty air found in food-processing plants.

Texas Instruments will be announcing that its first bubble memory — which can store 92,000 in-formation bits, or six times as many as the largest programmable semiconductor memory chip — is now in volume production and that its second bubble memory — with a storage capacity of a quarter of a million bits, 16 times larger than the capacity of the largest memory chip — will be available in sample quantities starting in the fourth quarter of

With these announcements, TI will be stealing a march on its competitors in what promises to he a holly contested area of computer-memory technology; it was discovered a decade ago by scientists at Bell Telephone Laboratories.

Rockwell a Competitor

Although manufacturers will eventually include most of the major names in the semiconductor industry. TT's nearest compentor in the field ioday is Rockwell International's microelectronic device division, which is not expected to make its first commercial-product announcement until late September. Rockwell's product is also expected to store a quarter of a million bits.

The first of the TI devices, the 92,000-bit memory, will sell for $100 in 100-piece quantities, or about one tenth of a cent per bit.

about one-tenth of a cent per bit.

Bubble memories, which store the ones and zeros of the binary computer language in magnetic domains, or so-called bubbles, are expected eventually to displace disk memories, since their cost will come down over time.

The latest TI bubble memory, which in sample quantities will sell for $500 apiece, measures threetenths of an inch on a side.

Ford to Build Engine Plant in Ontario

By Reginald Stuart

DETROIT, Aug. 4 (NYT) — In a move that is certain to intensify the friction between the U.S. government and Canada, Ford Motor an-nounced last night the construction of a new $533-million engine plant in Ontario, the largest single investment by Ford in Canada since it began operations there 74 years

Occidental Petroleum, the latest casualty in this streamlining process, announced earlier this week a decision to close its only operating refinery in Europe, Raffinerie Belge des Petroles, at Antwerp, and to "defer mdelinitely" engineering and construction work on a proposed refinery at Canvey Island, England.

The Antwerp facility, believed to be Belgium's oldest refinery dating to the 1930s, was recently utilizing only 30 to 40 percent of its annual 4.5-million-ton capacity — well below an estimated industry average of 60 to 70 percent in Western Europe. Part of the reason for this was the high cost of running such an old plant. Some 70 percent of its output was destined for export within the Common Market but

Work Deferred

Occidental also decided to write down its investment in the Canvey Island project, to $20 million from $110 million, and to defer indefinitely engineering and construction work on the partly completed 125,000-barrel-a-day refinery. The move, it said, was "primarily due to the uncertainty of refining profita-bility and unexpected escalation of construction costs as a result of delays in obtaining necessary approvals and continuing deterioration in the value of the dollar." It also cited the "less favorable" outlook for the conversion of heavier oils in gasoline.

Industry insiders maintain that the Canvey Island project was "not a strong runner" from the start. ney cite the persisting problem of overcapacity in Britain, in spite of the increasing amounts of North Sea oil coming ashore, and Occidental's position as a relatively small trader in the European products.

One plant in Portugal is believed to be about ready to come on stream and experts say that much of its output will have to be exported to be profitable. EEC tariffs on oil-products imports are "too low" to be an effective barrier, they argue. A simi-lar situation is said to exist with a string of Spanish refineries.

Privileged access to the EEC from various countries threatens to aggravate the situation further, observers say. More important, they add, are the rumblings from Arab nations, given their abounding supplies of petroleum and capital, about stepping up development of downstream activities.

Structural Shift Arab Petroleum Investments

Corp.'s general manager Nureddin Farrag said as n recent press conwithin the Common Market but there has been little demand for marginal supplies of refined products because of the excess capacity already existent in neighboring already existent in neighboring countries.

Farrag said at a recent page contribution ference here that the Arab states are eagerly seeking projects in downstream areas, like refining natural gas liquefication, petrochemicals and fertilizers, and are moving away from purely produc-tion operations. He admitted that would imply a "structural shift" in oil companies' operations in places like Europe.

As an indication of the scale of these projects, Apicorp alone is slated to investment about $73 billion in development of the Arab oil sector in the five years 10 1980, or at a rate of about $14 billion a year. Some $12.1 billion, or 17 percent, is intended for refinery investment. The company's main shareholders are the 10 members of the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries.

New refineries are already planned in several Arab countries, including Saudia Arabia, Algeria and possibly Egypt, and the "logi-cal market" for their output will be was made yesterday.

The Ford plant represents one of the largest single investments by a U.S. auto company in recent years, and several states, particularly Ohio, bad been agressively bidding for it. But the government of Canada and the province of Ontario joined hands in recent weeks to come up with the $70 million, the amount Canadian officials estimated would be required to offset the cost of building the plant in Canada instead of in the United States.

The proposed 1.3-million-squarefoot plant would employ about 2,600 workers. It represents an early effort in an expected rash of spending on capital projects for the design, manufacture and marketing of a complete new line of cars and trucks to meet stringent U.S. fuel-economy, pollution and safety standards in the 1980s.

The U.S. auto industry as a whole, according to tabulations by the trade publication Automotive News, is planning to spend approximately $78.5 billion on these projects through 1985. With the potential for such investments plus the jobs they represent the competition involving the states and provinces of Canada - and the governments of the two nations - is expected to become fierce.

He is from Chicago, "I'm here for a conference," he tells one of the inquisitive locals, "a hlack man's conference." He rents a room and, for the first few days, seems to do nothing more than walk about the town, sit inert staring at the river or, shut away in his room, drink himself into a wine insfolk he is an enigma, a curio. Before long, how-ever, he has wrenched St. Adri-enne's closely knit black community to its core. In this, his fourth covel, Ernest

STRANGER arrives one day

Gaines returns to the fictional terrain he carved for himself in "The Autohiography of Miss Jane Pitt-man" and "Of Love and Dust." The setting is Southeastern Louisiana, ocar Batoo Rouge and the Mississippi River. The characters too are familiar; they are the staunch rural types, like Catherine Carmier and Jane Pittman, who meet life's adversities with stoic heroism and whom Gaines has portrayed with such authenticity in his previous works. All are familiar all, that is, except Robert X, who emerges in this tale as a gaunt Giacometti-like figure amid a landscape peopled hy stalwart. Old South provincials.

to this sense, "In My Father's House" is a striking departure for Gaines, for during the first half of this novel the mysterious Robert X controls the tempo of the narrative. It is his presence, eerie and initially inexplicable, that dominates the story and, ultimately, precipitates the action. Gaines has unleashed an alieo force in the insulated folk world that has heretofore delineated his fiction. And although Robert X never completely emerges from the shadowy torpor in which he has been cast, he is the catalyst that shakes the traditional assumptions and tentative equilibrium of the St. Adrienne blacks, their venerable civil rights leader, the Rev. Phillip Martin, and even the white power structure with which they are in restrained conflict.

The confrontation between the stranger and Martin, and the unveiling of Robert X's mission force the pastor into a painful personal odyssey into the most remote and hidden corners of his past. In dramatizing this crisis in the civil rights leader's life, Gaines has melded two disparate fictional styles. At the outset, with stranger's unsettling arrival, "In My Father's House" reads almost like a mystery. Robert X's mission and motives are unclear. Is he a Northern militant? A psychopath? The tale intrigues because of the amhiguity of his actions and of the townspeople's reaction to him.

Rev. Martin is unveiled, however, Gaines shifts gears. The focus moves to the reverend and the struggle with his own internal demons, which Robert has forced him to confront. Each part funchim to confront. Each part func-tions well in itself, but there are problems with the transition. One wishes that Robert X were not so summarily dispatched, that his character were explored with the same sensitivity Rev. Martin is I accorded. And the shift from an objective, factual rendering at the B beginning of the story to a more subjective, nearly stream-of-coosciousness narrative is jarring.

Still, this is a powerful, deeply prohing novel. Gaines has taken numerous risks and, for the most part, he is successful. The Rev. Martin emerges as a complex, memorable character — a man ensoared in the conflict between his aspirations, his public image and the irreconcilable legacy of his past. Like most of Gaines' characters, he meets the challenge head-on; he pursues the dark secrets of his earlier life even when it seems his pursuit will destroy him. And through the Rev. Martin's agonizing journey, the complicated makeup of St. Adrienne's black community is revealed — from the calm, self-satis-fied respectability of its middle class to the more base, tortured alli-

Although "In My Father's House" is neither as expansive in deeply layered, resonant tale. Its themes of alienation between parents and offspring, and the irrevo-cable unity of past and present, are certainly large enough to command attention. And Gaines' ability to portray the rhythm and cadences of Southern mannerisms is unerring. Despite some minor flaws, this is a solid contribution to the impressive oeuvre of one of America's finest Southern writers.

Brownlee Ties Lead in Golf

SUNNINGDALE, England. Aug. 4 (UPI) - American Vivian Brownlee shot a two-under-par 72 today for a five-under-par 143 total and a share of the lead with Sally Little of South Africa after two rounds of the $100,000 European LPGA Championship.

Tournament favorite Lopez, bidding for her eighth victory this season "so people wont forget me," was one shot back at 144 after carding a 71, while Murle Breer, one-under overnight, picked up seven birdies and five bogeys to post a 72 and stand two strokes off the pace at 145. Amy Alcott carded a one-under-par 73 to join Jerilyn Britz, Peggy Conley, Shirley Englehorn and Bet-sv King at 146.

Brownice, starting the day three game lead over Cincinnati and a 314-same bules over 1 under, looked set to take the 6,174-yard tree-lined Old Sunningdale course apart when she raced to seven under after birdies at the second, fifth, ninth and 10th. that left me on a high note."

Little, who shot a 69 yesterday, struggled to master the gusting wind and matched her three birdies with three bogeys. ### Lack of Strength?

"I don't think the girl jockeys have been discriminated against, says Mary Lou Simmons, one of half a dozen women trainers in New York. The girls are all right, hut the best girl jockeys don't ride as well as the mediocre male jockeys. Most women don't have the strength you need."

Robyn Smith has an answer to that argument. "See that?" she said as she rolled back the sleeve of her red sweatshirt and bent her right arm, exposing modest but unmis-takahly muscular biceps. "That's a not having any muscle."

Until about a year and a half ago, Robyn regularly rode horses owned by Alfred Vanderbilt, a former ehairman of the New York Racing Association. Stable gossip hinted at a possible marriage, but Robyn denies a romantic involve-

"It was primarily a business relationship," she said. "Mr. Vanderbilt and I are still friends. He and his trainer apparently feel they can do better with other riders."

though many of them had nothing but good things to say about the race-riding ability of New York's tallest (at 5 feet 7) and most photogenic jockey.

"She rates a horse nice," said Allen Jerkens. "Doesn't use 'em up. She can make a horse be happy even when he's not on the lead. But New York is the toughest jock's room in the world. You don't have to be a woman not to do good

At another barn, Howard Tesher called her a "gifted rider" who was particularly effective with frontrunners or oervous, even neurotic horses. "But she needs a good agent," the trainer said. "It's hard to tell an owner you're going to use Rohyn Smith when you can get Jorge Velasquez, Steve Cauthen or Angel Cordero. Owners are in awa

Meanwhile, Rohyn gets by on her television endorsements, drives $22,000 red sports car she calls "my only luxury," and continues to wait for the horses most trainers promise they will have for her soon.

The Summer Picture Comes Back to Paris

PARIS (1HT) — During the August exodus, as Paris sidewalks are rolled up and iron shutters pulled down, there used to arrive in town what was called the summer picture: a glossy Hollywood romance that usually starred Audrey Hepburn and involved a lot of chasing through picturesque Paris locations.

As the Hollywood cash flow slowed to a hiccupping trickle this tradition faded, so it is nice to be able to report that this summer it has been revived, and once again an attractive young couple is running through the Tuileries, the gardens of Vaux le Vicomte, and the Paris Metro for Georges Roy Hill's film, "A Little Romance."

Hill's young people are very young indeed: 13 years old. As often happens in films she (Diane Lane) is a bit taller than be (Paris schoolboy Thelo Bernard). She is a lissome blonde: he, as the script says, looks like Charles Aznavour, a very old Charles Aznavour, but with more hair.

The film very definitely belongs to the kids. In the background as Diane's Paris-based American parents are Arthur Hill, the original George of "Who's afraid of Virginia Woolf?," and Sally Kellerman, returning to the screen after four years as a nightclub singer. Broderick Crawford plays himself and Laurence Olivier, who has made the cameo the most precious jewel in films, plays an aging boulevardier. The children play schoolchildren, she a rich American private-school type, he a titi Parisien who has learned English from watching Robert Redford films and is given to muttering, in a Maurice Chevalier accent, phrases like, "Let's mosey down for a piece."

Some Experience

While Diane Lane has has some acting experience (at the age of 6 she was in "Media," and has worked for Joe Papp in New York), Thelo (short for Thelonius) Bernard was discovered playing soccer in a Paris park. He spoke no English but, said Hill, "He was so good in his readings. I gave him a cassette in English and learned it in a week." Hill asked his 21-year-old daughter to coach and travel with the boy in the United States, and he clearly directs him with great

"If actors have talent they're easy to direct, whether they're adults or kids," he said. "You can supply the technique — that's easy — but not the talent."

The script of "A Little Romance," written by Allan Burns, co-creator of the Mary Tyler Moore show, is based on a French novel by Patrick Cauvin about two kids with exceptionally high IQs, "Emc' Mon Amour." "I don't read French that well. In fact, I don't read it at all," Hill said. He gave the novel to his indispensable daughter (when she's not hailing out her Dad she likes to hunt in Ireland), and che addied him to make a file. she advised him to make a film.

she advised him to make a nim.

"I've been wanting to do a love story for years. I never found one I liked. This is a fairy tale," Hill said. He is tall, with nearly parted hair and the sort of looks that will always be called boyish. Hardly a typical Hollywood director, he looks, even in a cotton shirt and khakis, as if he were wearing tweeds. He studied music with Hindemith at Yale and did half of his Ph.D. in Duhlin (subject of his projected thesis: music and musical forms in "Ulysses" and "Finnegans Wake") before becoming a Broadway actor who specialized in comedy.

"I bad a long run in Strindberg,"he said. "Strindberg is a very funny man. You just have to look at him that way."

Hill's Films

His films include "Thoroughly Modern Millie," "Hawaii," "Slaughterhouse Five," and, of course, "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" and "The Sting," One American critic has dismissed him as "implacably impersonal," which may not be all that bad a thing to be, and he is deeply embarrassed because "A Little Romance" in-cludes two slightly "in" film references: It begins with Thelo watch-ing a French-dubbed version of "Butch Cassidy," and near the end he is immersed in "La Stancata," which turns out to be Italian for

"I feel very self-conscious about it" Hill said," but the boy is obsessed by Redford in the book and we couldn't cut it out."It looks like the sort of homage one film director pays to another, a thought that relieves Hill as he hadn't looked at it that way: "After all," he reasoned, "no one else is likely to do a homage to me."

Hill loves old aircraft (he has a Waco UP F-7 that he flew across the United States seven times). He lives in Malibu and in New York. He isn't awfully happy when he is playing the role of a film auteur. "I've never been misquoted," he said, "but I've said some pretty

His last film, "Slap Shot" with Paul Newman, shocked many critics because of its foul language. "It was a burlesque on what language has become in sports," Hill said. "The language was worse in Saturday Night Fever." The theme common to all films, he says, is "A Little Romance" is indeed a love story, but anyone who expects a keyhole glimpse into the newly fashionable subject of preadolescent sex is in for a disappointment. The story has great sweet-ness and charm, and if the children are innocent the greatest inno-cent in the film is the elderly roue played by Olivier. Hill's view of innocence is not of the cloistered kind: It can be found through experience. "Innocence," he said, "is a quality that anyone who is serious tries to capture, to revert to. Any artist does, look at Matisse: To see the world with the freshness of a child is something artists have striven for in almost every field."

Ingmar Bergman's film of "The Magic Flute" is a good example of innocence, Hill says. The best example, and in his view the best film ever made, is Chaplin's "City Lights," Innocence, he says, is very head to achieve his the extention of its cost of its.

PEOPLE: Test-Tube Baby Louise Makes the Books Again

Joan Bemford's hand shook so much she could hardly fill in the official register in Oldham. Eng-land, to record the birth of the world's first test-tube baby, Louise Joy Brown. "I've done this bun-dreds of times," Mrs. Bamford told John Brown, the 10-day-old baby's father, "But do you know, I'm trembling. I never thought I would be so excited." Mrs. Bamford, the local registrar of births, yesterday filled in the certificate of the first known baby conceived outside the womb. Doctors removed an egg. from Lesley Brown's womb, fertilized it with her husband's sperm in a laboratory, and replaced the egg for nature to take its course. The result was Louise, said by Oldham General Hospital doctors and nurses to have become "a model of good behavior." "She drinks all her milk, sleeps soundly and charms everyone," a spokesman said. But both parents still must wear gauze masks and surgical gowns to give their daughter a bug

Christina Onassis Kauzov's Siberian honeymoon with her husband, Sergei, has been delayed. Mrs. Kauzov, who married Sergei Kauzov in a brief Soviet ceremony Tuesday morning, said that it may be a few days before they leave on their honeymoon. Originally, the couple planned to leave Moscow by train for Lake Baikal and Magaden in Siberia, but they canceled their trip. "You know, Sergei has some business to attend to and maybe we will look for an apartment," Mrs. Kauzov said. The couple is staying in a suite in the Hotel Intourist in downtown Moscow.

When they were found, he was nominated for the Medal of Honor, but the Navy intervened because it wants to hand him its own award for valor.
